

Better communication

The act of painting prompts children to communicate and express their feelings. They can express themselves non-verbally using different colors.

Develops hand-eye coordination

Young children need to develop the skill of hand-eye coordination. They can do so easily by learning to draw and paint different things in their surroundings.

Instills creativity

Painting gives ample opportunities for children to explore and make discoveries. They become more creative individuals when they mix colors and play with tools.

Busts stress

Today children are subject to various demanding situations. When they paint something they like, it functions as a stress reliever.

Art appreciation

While painting, children may observe the works of famous artists. This makes them appreciate their art and also that of their peers.

Makes children bond well

When you paint with your child, you can get to know them better and strengthen your bond.
