

Reasons For A Long-Term Couple Seeking Divorce

Communication gap

Couples may fail to communicate effectively due to overpowering responsibilities and losing connection and interest in each other.

Changing thought processes

A variation in thought processes might lead to misunderstandings and losing commonalities, leading to trouble in a marriage.

Lack of love/mutual growth

It is not uncommon for couples to grow out of love or not want to be with a non-supportive partner, which is one of the common reasons for a divorce.

Abusive marriage

No person would want to stay with a physically or emotionally abusive partner, which is why they could seek a separation.

Unresolved conflicts

Marriage comes with many challenges; when the issues remain unsolved, they become a cause for constant arguments and fights between a couple.

Lack of trust and respect

For most couples, dishonesty and disrespect are not acceptable in a relationship, and reasons for them calling it quits with their spouse.
