

Authoritative Parenting: What Is It Like?

The parents are demanding yet responsive. They state what they want the child to do but also respond to the problems they may face.

They apply verbal give and take, telling the child to carry out a task in a particular way. Also, they take the child's opinion about it.

There is a balance between criticism and praise where the child's negative actions are criticized while positive behavior is praised.

They give age-appropriate freedom while monitoring the child's actions to prevent them from misusing their independence.

They ensure that the children spend quality family time, putting their phones away for some time.

Mom Junction

Source: https://www.momjunction.com/articles/what-is-authoritative-parenting_00376548/