

Tips To Give A Sincere Apology

Apologize when you genuinely understand your fault so it's not apparent that you are faking it.

Don't say, "I'm sorry, but it only happened because...." The "but" here may mean you don't truly realize your mistake but instead are giving an excuse.

State, why you are sorry to make them believe you know what happened shouldn't have happened.

Take responsibility for their outburst and apologize for your actions and for hurting their feelings.

Try to apologize in person, as it could mean the world to them to see you take the time and effort to come and say sorry. You can give an apology letter or gift in person.

